Did you know that only 35% of small businesses have a plan in place?

Did you know that only 6% of companies that suffer a catastrophic data loss survive?

Did you know that there were 21 winter storm related deaths in 2010 in the United States?

Did you know that Hurricane Katrina generated commercial revenue losses of $4.6 billion?

Tip of the Week –

Work From Home Inventory

Allowing employees, especially key employees, the ability to work from home is an excellent way of maintaining productivity during a Winter Weather Event or recovery from any disaster event. However, when was the last time you ensured that your employees have availability to all the necessary resources from their home office? Don't wait for a disaster to happen to find out that some of your key employees may be lacking important resources.

For the employees who should have the capability to work from home, create an inventory of their current work at home resources. Once that inventory is complete ensure that these employees have all the correct resources. Do they have access to: the internet, the company network, software applications, a fax machine, a printer? If there are any resources lacking, work to put into place those resources that are needed and be sure to keep this inventory up to date. Creating this inventory will ensure that key employees will be able to work from home and maintain productivity when they cannot get to the office. Management will be able to supplement the workforce with employees who can work from home. The inventory will also act as a checklist for new employees who may need to be granted work at home capability.
